Lance Decision Backfires on Mondale Party's Confidence in His Political Judgment Is Shaken

By Howell Raines New York Times Service

SAN FRANCISCO - For weeks, Walter F. Mondale's overall campaign strategy has called for using the Democratic National Convention that opened Monday to focus the attention of the delegates on the need for party unity and that of the nation on the themes of the election campaign.

But with his rapid-fire decisions to pick a woman as his running mate and to elevate Bert Lance to a position of leadership, along with his abortive effort to remove Charles T. Manatt as party chairman, Mr. Mondale has instead riveted attention on the question of his own political judgment. Respect for Mr. Mondale's acu-

But the former vice president's decision to tap Mr. Lance, the Georgia party chairman, as general chairman of the Mondale-Ferraro campaign dis-mayed key Mondale supporters and shook their confidence in the campaign's sense of political tim-

Less than 48 hours after Mr. Manatt revealed that Mr. Mondale had told him he was out and that Bert Lance, a Carter administration official, was to become the overall director of the campaign, Mr. Manatt and Mr. Lance faced reporters together Sunday to say hat they were a new team.

The Mondale campaign chairman, James A. Johnson, said that Mr. Manatt "has agreed to continue as chairman of the DNC," concentrating on an effort to raise "an unprecedented amount of money.

Mr. Johnson denied that Mr. Mondale had reversed himself on the issue, saying the former vice president "will stick with his position . . . when we think it is a matter of principle."
But Representative Tony Coelho

of California, chairman of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee and a principal figure in a five-hour conference that led to the final decision, acknowledged that the strong opposition to Mr. Mondale's appointment of Mr. Lance gave Mr. Coelho the leverage to change Mr. Mondale's mind about Mr. Manatt.

Floor Fights Threatened Over Minority Planks

By Milton Coleman and Alison Muscatine

Washington Post Service SAN FRANCISCO — Supporters of the Rev. Jesse L. Jackson and nator Gary Hart have toughened their stands on four principal objections to the proposed Democratic Party platform and are threatening floor fights Tuesday that could jeopardize Walter F. Mondale's efforts to firmly control the national

Paul Tully, political director of the Mondale campaign and a chief coordinator of efforts to reach agreement on disputed positions before the convention opened, said he expected close votes on two of the proposals.

One would toughen the party's stated opposition to runoff primaries in 10 Southern states, which Mr. Jackson claims discriminate against women and minority groups. A second would strengthen the party's official stand on affirmative action, a policy that seeks to enlarge the opportunities of minority groups in such areas as jobs and education. The proposal suggests the plank include support for affirmative action goals and timetables, and, possibly, quotas.

Both planks had been advanced by Jackson supporters, and both gained increased support Sunday as Jackson delegates pressed for timetables, but not the mon backing from women, who make troversial remedy of quotas. up half the convention's delegates, and from many of the 300 black Jackson supporters have linked an delegates supporting Mr. Mondale affirmative action plank comproand Mr. Hart.

Hart backers also increased the price that Mr. Mondale will have to pay for a unified convention by deciding to press for tougher language on a platform plank setting curbs on the use of U.S. military forces abroad

Throughout the campaign, Mr. Hart had advocated such prohibitions, particularly in possible con-flicts in the Gulf. On Sunday, his strategists added language that would include Central America, a move designed to win support from lackson backers.

Reagan Officials/Find Deregulation Easy to Proclaim, Hard to Achieve

By Kenneth B. Noble New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - When President Ronald Reagan sets his reelection campaign in full gear, he is likely to boast of success in slashing federal regulations for once-sheltered industries such as banks and

But Mr. Reagan's record in "getting government off the backs of the people, as he puts it, has been mixed, especially when it comes to rules that touch on health, safety or the environment. A case in point is the decision last week by Elizabeth H. Dole, secretary of transportation, requiring air bags or automatic seat belts on all new passenger automobiles sold in the United States within five years.

The air bag decision was one the administration wanted to avoid, some say, because these so-called passive restraints represent an especially intrusive instance of government protecting people from

"Something like this makes me think, for this we elected Ronald Reagan?" said Walter Olson, associate editor of Regulation, a magazine published by the American Enterprise Institute, a conservative policy research organization. This is an issue that sticks out like a sore thumb, because there's an element of people being protected against a hazard they knew they were fac-

Democrats and some Republicans have long disagreed with that view. From air bags to drugs to motorcycle helmets, presidents and Congress have held that the law musi sometimes protect people from themselves.

"Left to their own devices," said Steven Kelman, associate director of public policy at the Kennedy School of Government, "a lot of people in the Reagan administration would have urged the virtual elimination of all safety and health for reporters Saturday to model the regulations. But the level of public commitment to these areas is strong enough to have so far restrained the ideologues."

Many authorities now say that political realities have tempered the administration's deregulatory zeal. An example of the mellowing is the Republican Party's demand for the cancellation of the 55 mile-an-hour (90 kilometers-an-hour) national speed limit. Richard M. Nixon signed that fuel-saving standard into law in 1974, during the Arab oil embargo. Federal officials later ding of the superwhips, will sport found that it also saved lives.

"It seems to me that for all the rhetoric about getting government off our backs, this has been a very paternalistic administration. In yet another instance of the administration sallying forth on safety issues, there are indications that the White House is reviewing an Environmental Protection Agency recommendation that would significantly lessen, or perhaps eliminate, the amount of lead refiners may add to gasoline.

Such a policy would be a star-tling reversal of the EPA's intention during the early days of the administration, which was to relax or abolish limits on leaded gas.

Insure and Rate the Banks

The domestic banking crisis is over. Quick, effective intervention by federal regulators helped Continental Illinois retain the deposits it needed to be be be be be because the beautiful to the it needed to keep its doors open. With luck, a merger partner for the big Chicago bank may yet be found, allowing it to avoid liquidation. But more was at stake than the fate of one bank that made bad loans to Texas wildestters. To prevent the run on Continental from spreading to other "money center" banks, reg-ulators were forced to guarantee tens of billions of dollars in Continental deposits that were not FDIC-insured. The regulators now face the problem of reconciling this total rescue with their equally commendable desire to have the marketplace punish the owners of poorly managed banks. That task may not be as difficult as at first appears.

To meet unexpected withdrawals by panicky depositors, banks may borrow from the Federal Reserve. When assets exceed liabilities, the Fed's capacity to create credit can easily cool the crisis. But when a bank still fails to cope, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation steps in. The failing bank is liquidated, or merged with a partner protected from losses with a cash boost from FDIC reserves.

Starting in 1982, the FDIC decided to go by the book in this routine. It vowed to honor all insured obligations, up to $100,000 per depositor, but greater amounts would not be protected. Now the regulators seem to have been bluffing. They did allow some small banks to fail, at considerable cost to their large deposico, the agency felt compelled to guarantee every depositor up to any amount. A deposit insurance system that permits small banks to fail while saving the big ones is neither fair nor efficient. And since depositors can never be sure which banks Washington will consider too important to let fail, it is also an unstable system. Is there an alternative?

One would be to extend FDIC insurance to the total $700 billion in deposits that is not now covered, and to pay the cost from premiums charged to all banks. But that alone would let mismanaged banks escape all responsibility. The way around this is to abandon the present practice of charging the same insurance premium for every deposited dollar. If premiums varied, depending on some objective measure of a bank's riskiness, banks would become liable for poor-quality loans but without damaging public confidence. That stick could be matched by a carrot.

Banks willing to increase their capital by selling uninsured long-term bonds or preferred stock could be rewarded with lower premiums.

There is time to plan for such a change. No harm is likely if Congress delays reform of the deposit insurance system until next year. It would be wasting an opportunity if it only expands insurance coverage and tightens con-trol over bank lending. Clever bank regulation could improve both safety and efficiency.

When Castro Tries Talks

Last spring Fidel Castro announced with a flourish that it would take a "total change" in the U.S. outlook for any improvement of U.S.-Cuban relations to come about. There has been no such change, but meanwhile he is taking a more modest and promising tack. Quietly Mr. Castro has just sent a high-level delegation to New York to discuss immigration matters with U.S. officials. Plans for these negotiations, the Reagan administration's first with Havana, were on the slow track until Jesse Jackson visited Cuba last month and pushed them onto a faster one.

Apart from the handful of prisoners Mr. Castro presented to Mr. Jackson, few Cubans have crossed the water since the Castro goverument slipped large numbers of criminals and mental patients into the group of people allowed to leave from the port of Mariel in 1980. That was a cynical stroke, and two U.S. presidents have since demanded that Cuba take back those of the Mariel emigrants who could not be absorbed into U.S. society. This is a just demand, but making it a condition for taking up other immigration questions has had the effect of holding up the departure of thousands of Cubans whom Havana is ready to let go. This is the first knot that the new talks will have to untie if the United States is to fulfill its historical role as refuge and if Cuba is to regain its use of emigration as a safety valve.

The abiding larger subject of concern is that, 25 years after Fidel Castro took power, Cuba remains substantially isolated from most of its neighbors and unnaturally dependent on an alien power, the Soviet Union. In the 1970s, Republican and Democratic presidents tried to break the long pattern of mutual hostility by broadening and improving ties. Mr. Castro responded with a major spurt of intervention-ism in Africa and Central America. His perennial and seemingly reasonable insistence that Washington "accept" the Cuban revolution still appears to center on a demand that Americans endorse his claim to send his troops, advisers or arms to any place he pleases. This larger difficulty should not keep the United States from doing whatever it can on a more limited basis to improve ties with Cuba.

Queries to an Ambassador

The case of U.S. Ambassador to the Vatican William A. Wilson, a political appointee and close friend of President Rengan, becomes more complicated. Why and to what extent did he become personally involved in two criminal investigations involving financial fraud? Why was he given an exception to the general rule that ambassadors must resign corporate directorships when they assume office?

On two occasions, Mr. Wilson tried to obtain information from high officials of the U.S. Justice Department about a rumored investigation of Archbishop Paul Marcinkus. The archbishop, American-born head of the Vaticonnection with the collapse of one of that country's largest banks, and is said by sources in the U.S. government to be the subject of inquiries concerning a money-laundering scheme. The initial request on behalf of the archbishop drew a strong letter from a Justice Department official, who counseled that such intervention in a criminal matter was "inappropriate" - whether it came while Mr. Wilson served as the president's unpaid personal representative to the Vatican or after he was confirmed as ambassador in March.

Mr. Wilson also tried to arrange a personal meeting between Attorney General William French Smith and Archbishop Marcinkus in Rome. The attorney general wisely limited it to a quick exchange of pleasantries. Why would Mr. Wilson do this after having been warned that his conduct was out of bounds? Mr. Wilson intervened with the Swiss government in the case of an American fugitive, a commodities trader indicted in America's largest tax evasion case. The State Department had urged Mr. Wilson not to get involved.

Then there is the matter of corporate directorships. State Department regulations require ambassadors to relinquish these private positions except in extraordinary circumstances. Mr. Wilson was granted an exception - the Senate Foreign Relations Committee was advised of it before he was confirmed -allowing though he does not appear to qualify on any of the three grounds listed in the regulations. The State Department could cite no other ambassador given this privilege. Mr. Wilson is now said to have resigned from one directorship and to accept no fees from the other.

Mr. Wilson is no longer a private citizen. He is a public servant with an obligation to avoid even the appearance of impropriety. Does he realize how very unwise it is for an ambassador to get involved in a criminal investigation? Does he comprehend the possibility of conflict of interest when an employee of the govern-ment continues to hold a high position in a private corporation? Does he intend to offer an explanation of his conduct?

Toward a Labor Edge in Israel

What do you think will happen in the electron? te's impossible to say with certainty. Former Prime Minister Menachem Begin has tremendous prestige among many voters. If he is persuaded to join the Likud campaign, that would have an impact. But if nothing similarly dramatic happens, it is safe to assume that the gap will continue to diminish, and when the votes are counted, Labor will be only a few seats ahead of the Likud. Given this scenario, coalition making would be difficult for either party. But the Labor Party would have a better chance to succeed than the Likud.

The resolution was made simultaneously with a request to the Mexican government to grant the exiled revolutionary leader permission to reside in Mexico. T OKYO — Like war guilt, the old Japanese sense of inferiority with regard to Western political institutions is being reappraised. The postwar rush to emulate Western politics is giving way to a reverse contention that there is nothing more to be learned. A book published four years ago with the immodest title Japan: A Super-Developed Country" contends that Ja-pan's system is the world's best and that the world can best learn from it.

The author, Professor Yatsuhiro Nakagawa of Tsukuba University, argues that Japan's welfare system is the best, that its judiciary is the most independent, that only Japan has solved the problem of separating church from state and that its achievement in decentralizing government should be the envy of the world. Japan, he concludes, is the world's "most democratic and politically advanced country."

The most far-reaching introspec-tion, however, is found in the flood of writings about the Japanese char-acter and its supposed uniqueness.

The role reversal displayed in these writings is startling. Three decades ago the fashion was to disparage things Japanese and compare them unfavorably with Western ways. British scholar Ronald Dore recently recalled the self-punishing essays by Japanese authors in 1951 which deplored the national character as too obliging and conciliatory, even cowardly, and urged the adop-tion of Western individualism. It was, Mr. Dore said in a speech here, "a very vulgar view that some-how or other Japan had to be more like America, and every Japanese somehow or other had to grow six feet tall and say 'hi-ya' when he saw people, instead of bowing."

Today the vogue is to celebrate Japan's uniqueness. Nihon-jin ron. or theories of Japan, are a virtual industry, devoted to searching out the special character of Japanese culture, beliefs and even physical traits. Some of it is vaguely wacky. "The Japanese Brain" is a book which describes how this intricate mechanism functions differently from the Westerner's brain. Jared Taylor, an American author who speaks and reads the language, uncovered in a bookstore a tome entitled "The Japanese Nose." Scholars have described supposedly deep philosophical differences that distinguish the Japanese. The By William Chapman This is the second of two articles.

University spoke of a fundamental life-view chasm — Europeans rejecting the idea of fate controlling one's life, while Japanese accept it. The effort to isolate and often extol what is Japanese over the non-

Japanese recently became a market-ing strategy under the rubric "Ja-panesque." The theory was that customers could be appealed to through evocations of the specialness of Japanese culture. The search for national identity. for Japaneseness, has a spokesman in Yasuhiro Nakasone, who coincidentally was chosen prime minister at a time when all of these threads were coming together. He is of a philosophical bent, unlike predecessors who were content to let issues like identity and history go unmen-tioned in the pursuit of making Japan economically safe in the world. Mr. Nakasone is a nationalist who got his political start campaign-ing with a Japanese flag when its display was forbidden by occupation authorities. He is also an inter-nationalist who wants to stake out Japan's new place in the order of things. His is no small vision.

Japan's goal, Mr. Nakasone wrote in a 1978 pamphlet, is to be a leader in promoting a "new civilization" in the world and to protect world peace. And Japan must enhance the prosperity of the Asia-Pacific re-gion, becoming the center of economic management for the region while less-developed countries concentrate on production.

There is no doubt who is best equipped to lead Japan on this mis-sion. In an election speech last No-vember Mr. Nakasone asserted that when he took office Japan was isolated from the world and picked on by other countries. (He used the phrase "fukuro-dataki," which means to be placed in a sack and beaten with sticks.) Under his leadership, he said, Japan had begun to "walk proudly" and to carve out an portant position in the world.

Such braggadocio may raise few eyebrows in the United States, where talk of "standing tall" and leading the world on grand missions is standard campaign fodder. But it sounds different in Japan. What Prime Minister Nakasone and the revisionists of history and the analysts of Japanese uniqueness seem to be saying, in different ways, is that a new period is beginning here. Japan is at last number one, and the world should take note. The days of feeling guilty and accepting second-class status are over.

It is all a bit disturbing to some old friends of a less assertive Japan, including Edward Seidensticker, the brilliant translator who has spent a career studying this country's ways. Recently he compared the old and the new, and emerged with dismay.

"Back in the years after the war, the Japanese sense of inferiority was so painful that one wanted to tell them to be quiet about it at least, if they could not overcome it ... It was hard to imagine in those days that there could be a return to the arrogance of which the Chinese and the Koreans liked to talk.

"There may not be arrogance exactly, today, but there is something that may properly be called over-confidence. Assured that their methods are superior, the Japanese become inclined to think that these are what the world needs and that Japan, having them, needs nothing more. They forget that the world is a tough and dangerous place."

The writer this month concludes his second tour as Tokyo correspondent of The Washington Post.

Japan Being a World Leader, The Rest of Us Should Discover It

WASHINGTON — The Japanese, says William C. Norris, 72-year-old chairman of Control Data Corporation, "are taking advantage of us. They're living off our technology ... Their access is far better than our access over there." Not only businessmen but many American scientists, engineers, edi-torial writers and others take as a given that Japan's great economic success comes from what it has been able to copy from America. And yet some of these same critics argue. curiously, that Japan is forging so far ahead in advanced technology that American companies are being or will be overwhelmed.

Justin Bloom, a retired Foreign Service officer who was science counselor at the U.S. Embassy in Tokyo for six years, recently told a tional committee that he is "deeply disturbed" by this contra-diction and the emotions which lead to it. "How can the Japanese be considered parrots and copiers on the one hand, and the most awesome challengers to our technological lead on the other?" he asked.

Mr. Bloom's evidence suggests that Mr. Norris has not accurately described the situation concerning access to technical information. American access to Japanese data is not as good as Japanese access to America's, but the Japanese are not to blame. Rather, it is a choice that most American firms have made. There exists a system for U.S.-Japanese exchange of information at the governmental level, through

13 major agreements. This has led to an extensive flow of information from Japan. Mr. Bloom says that "as much information is obtained by the United States from Japan as goes in the opposite direction."

He says American companies by and large ignore the huge amounts of scientific and technological data that the Japanese make available in English, often due to a "general underestimation of the Japanese ability to conduct original research."

There is a wealth of information, just sitting there in English-language publications, Mr. Bloom says. Why do the Japanese do it? Their ment is sensitive to criticism that it is a closed society; it wants to demonstrate that it does not shut itself off from the rest of the world. And the Japanese recognize that their language will never be an international one. Since their scientists and others wish to communicate with the outside world (and because there is a commercial incentive, as well, to sell publications), the Japanese go to the trouble of translating large amounts of their data.

"My guess is that it has gone argely untapped," says Mr. Bloom. To be sure, the best and most complete source of information is the technical literature itself, in some 10,000 science and engineering journals, trade papers and gov-erument reports published in Japanese. For the most part, however,

American companies do not bother to pick up this information. Only a few enterprising compa-nies make the effort to go after this information, and a few commercial abstracting and indexing services have recently come into being. But the failure of the Western economies to stress widespread education in the Japanese language — to say nothing of educating scientists and engineers in technical Japanese — is a self-imposed barrier. Only four officers on the U.S. Embassy staff in Tokyo speak Japanese. Mr. Bloom knows of no language officer at the State Depart-ment who has received instruction

n technical Japanese. He concedes that Japan has not made it easy for foreigners to work or study there. Japanese often doubt that foreigners are willing to work hard enough for long enough to become proficient in the language. Still, as Mr. Bloom says, Japan is now a world leader in industrial and commercial technology, "and some-thing must be done" about the negative attitude toward it. Japan, he remarks, is not an enemy but an important ally. It is also a tough economic com-petitor — which is good for both sides. "I hope that the competitive challenge offered by Japan will be looked at in this light." he says. "If not, we will never be truly well informed of what is going on in that country, or be able to fully exploit the scientific advances made there." The Washington Post.

Alas, Dancing in the Aisles Doesn't Really Work

W ASHINGTON — Reading the chapter entitled "Romance Intermezzo" in H.L. Mencken's amiable, autobiographical "Heathen Days" would melt the hardest Democratic heart. It is Mencken's account of the most charming of all political conventions — the Democratic con-vention of 1920, held, in case you haven't guessed, in San Francisco. Mencken was a connoisseur of conventions, attending them every four years, sweating and complaining but reporting in so witty and urbane a prose that nobody has equaled it. The prime source of the convention's success was a solicitous predecessor of Dianne Feinstein, Mayor James Rolph. He ordered not only excellent accommodations, ranging from elegant hotel rooms to a pristine convention hall, but also nectar for every delegate willing to sip it. lt came, according to Mencken, in the form of "a carload of Bourbon whiskey, old, mellow and full of pungent but delicate tangs." (This was at the onset of prohibition, when most of the illegally available drink was a mix of rum, turpentine and rye, with odd things floating in it.) Daily the bourbon was escorted to worst, as courtly as a conference of ambassadors. At the best, they were aglow with human warmth. The cause for that, besides the bourbon, was the convention band. Full of the ripest of harmonies, the band sainted every speaker with an appropriate tune. It greeted a consman from Indiana, for example, as he went to the podium, with "On the Banks of the Wabash." The year 1920 was the first in which female delegates attended. The first to speak was a very attractive woman from Massachusetts. When she reached the platform the band played "Oh, You Beautiful Doll," and the male delegates rose to their slightly unsteady feet and cheered. The next female delegate to address the convention was a lady from West Virginia, an ex-actress who, as Mencken put it, "knew precisely how to walk across a stage and what clothes were for." When the band played for her, the cheers could be heard as far off as San Jose.

When the governor of New York, Al Smith, made his appearance, the band swung into "The Sidewalks of New York." By the time the second stanza was reached, some delegate vention proceedings were, at the started singing the words. A hundred delegates joined in Encouraged by this outburst of song, the band swung into "Little Annie Rooney," then "The Bowery," and then into other sprightly tunes, all in waltz time. Soon a male delegate, blood brother to the one who had started the singing, seized the nearest female and began to waltz her along the aisles. After the first half hour the only delegates not pirouetting were some Baptist fundamentalists from Mississippi and a one-legged war veteran. The days passed in happy aban-don. When the hall grew a bit confining, the delegates moved out into the San Francisco sunshine. They adjourned temporarily over a weekend, but that was so they could explore the their bourbon bottles to them. When they left for home at last, they took with them nothing but lovely memories. They blessed Jim Rolph, who continued as mayor for the next 11 years and then became governor of California.

Will Gary Hart roll over, playing for party-regular IOUs in 1988, or put up a battle, reaching for rank-and-file leadership after a Mondale defeat? Watch for him to exploit the resentment of Californians at the ill-timed attempted firing of the Democratic national chairman. Charles Manatt. Mr. Lance was all for keeping him on through the elec-tion, but old Mondalians wanted his scalp now. That was unnecessary.
Mr. Hart will also embarrass the Mondale-Perraro followers in the platform committee by resisting their pledge to take the line favored by both Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan offering automatic U.S. protection to ships in the Gulf. In this case, Mr. Hari's natural isolationism makes good strategic sense. Let Arabs confront framians, and let Europeans and Japanese take the lead in

Brazil Dissidents Unite On Presidential Nominee

By Juan de Onis

Los Angeles Times Service RIO DE JANEIRO - Brazil's major opposition party and a pow-erful dissident wing of the pro-government party have agreed on an election-year pact to support Tancredo Neves, governor of Minas Gerais state, as their presidential candidate in an attempt to end 20 years of military-dominated gov-

The agreement was announced in Brasilia by Vice President Aureliano Chaves, leader of the dissi-dent wing of the pro-government Social Democratic Party, and by Ulysses Guimaräes, president of the opposition Brazilian Democratic Movement Party.

Both Mr. Chaves and Mr. Guimarães relinquished their own presidential candidacies in giving their support to Mr. Neves, a national political figure (or 35 years.
He was elected governor of Minas Gerais, Brazil's second-largest state, in 1982 as candidate of the Brazilian Democratic Movement

The pact stipulates that the op-position coalition will vote for Mr. Neves when the National Electoral College meets Jan. 15 to elect the successor to President João Baptista Figueiredo, whose term ends in March. The 686 members of the electoral college include the present members of the Senate and Chamber of Deputies plus six delegates from each of Brazil's 23 state.

In the 20 years since the armed forces overthrew President João Goulart, this is the first time that the opposition has had a real chance to win the presidency.

Mr. Figueiredo is the lifth army general in succession to occupy the presidency. Until recently, he and his military advisers were confident that the government controlled the majority in the electoral college and would be able to retain power, even with a civilian candidate.

But the pro-government Social Democratic Party split over the choice of a candidate. The leading contender is Paulo Maluf, a former governor of São Paulo state, who has campaigned extensively.

Mr. Chaves, who is the leading civilian politician in the government and a former governor of Minas Gerais, opposes Mr. Maluf. Mr. Chaves and other dissidents formed a Liberal Alliance that in-tends to vote for Mr. Neves, a moderate figure, in the hope of defeating Mr. Maluf in the electoral college vote. The Neves candidacy will be formalized in a national convention of the Brazilian Democratic Movement Party next month. The Social Democratic Party convention is in September, and Mr. Maluf is regarded as the sure winner.

NEW YORK - Al Schacht, 91, who entertained millions of fans as the "clown prince of baseball," has died in a Waterbury, Connecticut, hospital after a brief illness.

Alexander Schacht, who died Saturday, was born in New York City on Nov. 12, 1892. He did not start out to become a baseball zany. A sore arm cut short his major league career as a pitcher with the Washington Senators. He played only from 1919 to 1921, winning 14 games and losing 10.

After a stint in the minors, Mr. Schacht turned to clowning in 1924. He teamed with Nick Altrock and they made nearly everyone ex-cept each other happy with their capers. After 10 years, they broke up their act and Mr. Schacht went on to gain a world reputation as a pantomimist. He performed at many World Series and All-Star games and in nearly every city in both the majors and minors.

Over Treatment of Sakharov

NEW YORK - Izvestia, the Soviet government newspaper, has questioned the handling of the investigation of an environmental disaster that polluted a major river in the Ukraine, depriving several cities of drinking water.

Under the headline "Why Is the Trial Being Put Off?" the paper reported that four officials arrested on suspicion of negligence had been freed pending a geologic study of the area around Stebnik, where a dam holding back an artifi-cial lake of highly toxic salt brine gave way in September.

The break opened a gap approximately 60 yards (55 meters) wide and 15 yards deep, turning loose a billion gallons of concentrated brine that had been dumped by a fertilizer plant.
The flood of semiliquid waste tore across a highway and railroad and spilled into the Dniestr River, traveling downstream for nearly 300 miles (480 kilometers) and polluting the water source for a large region including the port of Odes-sa, a city of a million people. It was one of the largest environmental disasters in Soviet history.

Still, it is rare for a Soviet newspaper to press a law enforcement official about the delay of a trial.

The Izvestia article said criminal proceedings had been started against four officials in charge of design, construction and maintenance of the dam. None has been identified. They were arrested and held pending trial.

The precise date of their release is unclear but in late June an Izvestia reporter called an assistant prosecutor in the Ukraine to ask why they had been freed. The Izvestia article quoted the official as saying a preliminary investigation had shown possible geologic causes for the collapse of the dam that might exonerate the

Today, the house of Patou is showing signs of life again under the leadership of his two greatnephews, Jean de Mouy, 33, president of the firm, and his brother,

"But so far, we're only tackling the perfumes," said Jean de Mouy in the refurbished 18th-century salons of the Rue Saint Florentin, a stone's throw from the Place de la

After the death of Patou, the house was run by his brother-in-law, Raymond Barbas, who married Patou's only sister, Madeleine. Since the brothers took over in 1980, they have been busy cleaning house. In 1981, they made one of their major moves, repurchasing their New York firm, Jean Patou

Inc., which had been sold in 1930.

"After that we opened branches in Hong Kong, London, Geneva and Milan. We're still talking per-fumes," Jean de Mouy added. Eventually, we'll concentrate on the couture and ready-to-wear. But for a start, we'd like the world to know more about Patou the per-

He also introduced a new color each season. Working with famous Lyons houses such as Rodier or Bianchini Ferier, he created such tints as "dark dahlia" in 1929 and the famous "Patou blue" in 1923. His feuds with archrival Coco Chanel were famous. Anita Loos, who obviously favored him, said: "Patou made Chanel look like a milliner. He revolutionized the way women dressed. . . . Before him it was all ruffles and flounces and after, it was clean and elegant."

Art Deco-inspired and more architectural than Chanel Patou was a modernist with a strong sense of tradition, who saw clothes as being for real life, to be worn again and again. He was the first to make jersey bathing suits, a suntan oil which still sells, something he called "les riens" (accessories and perfumes) and he was first with spelling out his logo on sports shirts — an idea soon followed by

"Last Night at the Alamo" has nothing to do with the so-called major issues of our time, but, on the other hand, never for a minute does its total preoccupation with the small crises of its boozy, inarticu-late characters deny the existence of those issues. Like most of the people in this country, the principal figures in "Last Night at the Alamo" have other, more important things on their minds.

The film was written by Kim Henkel, whose only previous claim to fame is the screenplay for the notorious Texas Chainsaw Massacre," and directed by Eagle Pennell, whose "The Whole Shooting Match" was a comic treasure.

"Last Night at the Alamo" is so good, in fact, that when I think about it I want to drop names, including those of Mark Twain, Sam Shepard and David Mamet, who have heard America singing and delighted in the delirious cacophony of missed notes and lyrical, often obscene non sequiturs.

In form "Last Night at the Alamo" recalls that time in the American theater 40 or so years ago when the barroom was the world. Into this world would wander the misfits, the down-and-outs, the con men, hookers and backsliding members of the bourgeoisie who, in the course of the evening, usually found some sort of absolution.

The Cowboy's major admirer is Claude (Louis Ferryman), a man approaching unhappy middle age who spends much of his time arguing on the pay telephone with his wife, Marcie, who remains forever off correct tending to her over-sen off screen tending to her over-ap-plianced house, which has two telephones, with two listings, for their

When Cowboy finally appears, he turns out to be a good-looking, smooth-talking, over-the-hill high school hero who has, with immense satisfaction, just told off his construction boss and is, once more, out of a job.

In the course of the evening Cowboy's plan to save the Alamo comes to nothing - it has something to do with contacting a Texas legislator with whom Cowboy roomed during his one and only It's just a coincidence, because year at college. ### Livorno Dredging Canal For Modigliani Works

United Press Interne LIVORNO, Italy - Workers begin dredging a Livorno canal Tues-day in an effort to recover some valuable Modigliani sculptures.

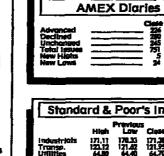

Officials hope to find the now priceless sandstone sculptures that the artist discarded shortly before he left the city of his birth in 1906 to win fame in Paris. He discarded the art in despair when his hometown friends laughed at his work.

NEW YORK - Aided by a late rally, prices were mixed at the close of the New York Stock Exchange on Monday in slow trading. The Dow Jones industrial average, down 6 points at midsession rising 5.30 Friday, was ahead 6.96 to 1,116.83. It had lost 12.70 overall

Analysts said the relatively slow trading dis-played most of the day indicated that Wall Street was not in a buying mood because investors were faced with too many uncertainties. Henry Kaufman, the Salomon Brothers econ-omist, was believed to have triggered some selling when he said borrowing costs were not near a peak and that "much higher interest rate loom ahead." He said any slowing of the econo-my in the next year was unlikely to reduce them. Mr. Kaufman, in his quarterly investment report, said he predicted higher interest rates and higher inflation because the U.S. economy will continue to expand beyond its long-term

Mr. Kaufman's remarks were publicized as the the Federal Reserve's Open Market Committee began its two-day policy meeting in Washington. Mr. Kaufman said he does not think the Fed will tighten.

But there has been speculation over the past several weeks that the board, faced with the strong economy and huge borrowing demands, will raise the discount rate it charges banks for loans to 91/2 percent from 9 percent.

Investors were disturbed when federal funds rates, which in the past have been indicators of Fed action, traded at 11% percent in the early going, up from 10% percent last week.

The dollar lost ground on many international exchanges early in the day and gold rebounded from a drubbing its taken the past couple of weeks. The recent drop in commodities prices is a major reason inflation has cooled. The bond market has been staging a rally the past week because of the inflation numbers. Analysts said stocks could perk up if the bond rally continues for a while.

Traders also were hesitant because they were being bombarded with second-quarter earnings reports, which generally makes it difficult for the market to establish a major pattern.

The investment community, as it has in the past year, has shown it will not tolerate disappointing results. The good news, in many cases Unocal, a 5% winner Friday on rumors that Indiana Standard would make a takeover offer, was high on the active list from the outset and generally higher. Unocal denied rumors Friday but Indiana had no comment.

FUTURES AND OPTIONS

Securities, Futures Markets Chase Say Move Toward Integration

By H.J. MAIDENBERG

New York Times Service

EW YORK — Next Monday the U.S. securities and futures markets will take a giant step toward the integration of their industries. On July 23, members of the Chicago Board of Trade, the largest futures exchange market, will have access to the options on the Major Market Index of the American Stock Exchange.

Later, when the Chicago Board starts trading futures on the MMI, Amex specialists will be able to offset options positions in

Also on July 23, the value of the Amex index of 20 blue-chip stocks will be doubled to $200 a point, from the current $100. This will provide institutional portfolio managers with more efficient and economical hedging opportunities.

The doubling of the option's value is also aimed at attracting more speculators to the MMI. It now takes roughly a 10-point move in the Dow Jones 30-stock industrial average to move the MMI 20 bluechip index one point. After the change, the relationship should be five to one, said Paul G. Stevens, executive vice president in charge of operations at the

Amex anticipates a surge in business after it links with the Chicago Board.

"Basically, what we are doing at the Amex and the Chicago Board is responding to the needs of our members who recognize that index options and futures are among the most active and fastest-growing markets," Mr. Stevens said. "Chicago doesn't have an index futures product at the moment, and our people needed a means to lay off their options risks with futures. Anticipating a surge in business after it links up with the Chicago Board, the Amex next Monday will also create 108 two-year permits to increase the number of options specialists, who are the principal market makers on that exchange. ENSITIVE to the financial crunch affecting brokerages, as well as to the fact that the much larger New York Stock Exchange also plans to expand its stock options business, the Amex has also invested heavily in the latest electronic order-

The Chicago futures and options exchanges, however, continue to be the leaders in market innovation. For example, the Chicago Board of Trade provides members with current statistics detailing their share of the business in each futures and options market. Thomas K. Bonen, vice president in charge of marketing at the Chicago Board, said that five years ago, a 1-percent share of the Treasury bond futures market was worth $50,000 to $70,000 in brokerage revenues. "Last year," he said, "the same share was worth $2.5 million. Because our T-bond market has grown so large, a 1-percent share in the first half of this year was worth as much as $2.5 million, the same as for all of 1983. The numbers are of particular interest to Chicago Board members because none are discount brokers. However, many Chicago Board members clear trades for discounters, Mr. Bonen

As for access to the Amex's MMI options, Mr. Bonen said his exchange's members "can't wait until July 23 because, among other reasons, we see the MMI index options as paving the way for a tremendous MMI index futures market, as well as being an interesting investment tool for ordinary investors."

Suppose, he went on, an investor wanted to "buy the Dow" but caper commission cost. Because the 20-stock MMI closely tracks the 30-stock Dow average, this could be done easily by buying 100 shares of each of the blue chips in the MMI.

To buy 100 of each of the 20 stocks in the MMI, Mr. Bonen said, would cost $1,596 in commissions at a full-service broker in a larger city, $1,611 at a regional brokerage and $785 at a discount broker. These commissions only represent purchases, not both buying and selling, he emphasized.

Theoretically, the same investment value — 100 shares of each of the 20 blue chips in the MMI — would translate into only four of the planned futures contracts. The roundturn (buying and selling) commission on the four futures would range between $60 and $150, depending on whether one used a full-service or discount broker, Mr. Bonen noted.

Argentine Loans Are Major Cause

NEW YORK - Chase Manhattan Corp. reported Monday a 14-percent decline in earnings and J.P. Morgan & Co. a 9.8-percent drop, primarily as a result of overdue Argentine loans. First Chicago Corp., however, reported a 23-percent gain.

Chase, holding company for the third-largest U.S. bank, had earnings of $90 million, or $2.21 a share in the second quarter, down from $105 million, or $2.68 a share, last

Morgan, whose principal subsidiary Morgan Guaranty Trust is the fifth-largest bank, had net income of $103.7 million, or $2.32 a share, down from $115 million, or $2.59 a share, in the second quarter of

First Chicago's non-accrual loans totaled $918 million including American National, but the bank said its exposure in Argentina is less than three-quarters of one percent of total loans and was not broken out.

Chase Manhattan said cross border loans to Argentina placed in non-accrual status cut $13 million from 1984 earnings. Last year's second-quarter earnings included an $11-million after-tax gain from loans paid by Iran.

Chase said it adopted guidelines recently announced by federal regulators on non-accrual loans, instead of waiting for the third quarter when they become mandatory. Under those guidelines, a loan is placed in a non-accrual category when any payments on it are late by 90 days or longer. Chase said its total non-accrual portfolio amounted to $2.2 billion on June 30, 1984, up from $1.8 billion a year ago. Approximately $520 million of cross-border Argentine loans are in the total

Hitachi: Japan's Jack of All Trades

But IBM Dispute Still Troubles Electronics Firm

By Andrew Pollack

New York Times Service TOKYO - When Katsushige Mita, president of Hitachi Ltd., took the podium at the company's annual meeting last month. he knew what to expect -- lots of questions about the company's obvious sore spot: the case in which Hitachi was accused of stealing trade secrets from the International Business Machines

Corp.

After more than an hour, Mr. Mita could take it no longer. He interrupted a persistent ques-

"We did our utmost to solve the problem and we have pun-ished ourselves, including my-self," Mr. Mita said. "We would like to do our best from now on. too." A round of applause erupted, silencing the questioner.

Two years after Hitachi was caught trying to buy IBM secrets by the FBI, the company is still trying to distance itself from the case. How well it succeeds is important for Japan because the company is one of the nation's industrial standard-bearers.

Hitachi is one of Japan's largest manufacturing companies, vying with Nissan and Matshushita for second place behind Toyota. It has nearly $20 billion in revenues. It is also the most diverse, with 729 subsidiaries and affiliates employing 210,000 people and producing more than 20,000 products, from microwave ovens to cars for Japan's bullet trains.

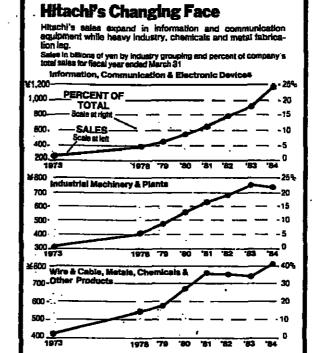

And it is a bellwether issue on the Tokyo Stock Exchange. "When you sell Hitachi, you sell Japan," said Peter G. Wolff, an analyst with Bache Securities Ja-

The IBM incident threatens to weaken Hitachi in a field that is the key to its future. Hitachi is now making a major transformation away from its slow-growing older businesses of heavy electrical equipment into the electronics business. Among the many changes under way, a washingmachine factory is also producing word processors, and an ele-vator and escalator plant has added computer terminals to its product list.

The IBM case, moreover, is only one problem confronting Hitachi as it makes this transformation. The company lacks mar-

And its great breadth of prod-ucts, which helps cushion the company from downturns in any one business, can also be a weakness in preventing it from concentrating on the most important ones. It tends to make the company a jack of all trades but master of none.

"It doesn't focus sufficiently to get control or command of any business it is in," said James C. Abegglen of the Boston Consulting Group.

None of these problems has noticeably slowed Hitachi's growth. But this could be just good fortune: 1983 was a boom year for some key products such (Continued on Page 9, CoL3)

WASHINGTON - A series of reports Monday, coming after a lyst termed the "best-of-all worlds string of amouncements late last configuration for the U.S. econoweek, continued to paint a picture of a U.S. economy still growing at a earlier this year.

U.S. factories, mines and utilities operated at 81.7 percent of capacity in June, the highest level since July 1981, the government reported in a separate report, the Federal Reserve Board said consumer installment debt shot up a record $10.23 billion in May, following a gain of $6.41 billion in April. And in a third report, the Commerce Department said U.S. businesses restocked their shelves and showrooms at a slower clip during May, pushing inventories 0.9 per-cent higher than in April. Sales were up 1.6 percent, the most since December.

Consumer buying, which has been fueling the recovery, appears to be still quite strong even in the face of climbing interest rates. The Federal Reserve said that the May advance in consumer debt exceeded the previous high of $6.61 billion, recorded in February. Analysts have been watching the latest government reports for signs as to where the economy is headed. They worry that if it continues ex-panding at the fast clip of the first quarter, inflation will surge to high levels and interest rates will remain Slower growth, they say, would

NEW YORK — The chief economist of Salomon Broth-ers, Henry Kaulman, said Monday that the peak in interest rates is not near.

For the next three quarters, the economy will continue beyond its long-term growth potential, leading to higher utiliza-tion of resources and intensifying wage and price pressures, Mr. Kaufman wrote in the firm's quarterly investment strategy.

He added: "The slowing in the pace of economic activity in the next 12 months is unlikely to reverse the cyclical upward movement in interest rates." The stock market turned lower early Monday afternoon and credit markets gave up most of their advance after Mr. Kauf-

WASHINGTON - The U.S. government guaranteed $425 mil-hon of loans to help liraq build an oil pipeline through Jordan, but only after Iraq revised the proposal to include large quantities of American steel pipe, according to Rea-gan administration officials.

The Export-Import Bank was initially opposed to giving financial guarantees for the pipeline because it believed that the Iran-Iraq war posed excessive financial risks, the officials said. Those reservations were overcome when Iraq agreed to order about $100 million worth of American steel pipe, which was not part of the original proposal, adminis-tration officials said. The episode shows the role that

U.S. Sales of TV,
Video Equipment
Seen Hitting High
The Associated Press
WASHINGTON — Another record sales year appears to be in prospect for color TV sets WASHINGTON — Another record sales year appears to be in prospect for color TV sets and video recorders in the United States, according to the latest industry figures.

Data for the first six months of 1984, released Sunday by the Electronic Industries Association, show that color television sales climbed 20 percent over the same period last year, while recorder sales shot up another 84 percent.

"We really expect to see another banner year this year," said Alian D. Schlosser, an association snokesman. tion spokesman.

The continued climb in sales was attributed to the general economic recovery, introduction of television sets with technological features that produce a better picture, price-cutting on recorders and desirious by construct to the recorders, and decisions by consumers to up-grade their sets for use with recorders, comput-ers and video games. crs and video games.

While no figures are available on how many units actually are bought by consumers each week, the industry group's tabulations of sales by manufacturers to retailers are considered to give the best gauge of sales activity.

The new statistics showed that more than 2.9 million recorders were sold by manufacturers to retailers during the first half of 1984, up 84.4 percent compared with the 1.6 million sold during the first six months of 1983.

Sales of color televisions during the first half of 1984 passed the 7.3 million mark, up 20 percent compared with the 6.1 million sets sold percent compared with the 6.1 million sets sold during the same period last year. Sales of large-screen projection sets also continued to climb, rising 38.5 percent to 78,073 against 56,374 in the first half of 1983.

The only area where television equipment showed a decline was in black-and-white sets. Their sales sagged 16.8 percent, from 2.63 million during the first six months of 1983 to 2.19 million this year.

With the exception of black-and-white sets, the latest sales gains come on top of records set in 1983. Last year, manufacturers sold slightly fewer than 14 million color television sets to dealers, and doubled their sales of recorder. dealers, and doubled their sales of recorder units from 2 million in 1982 to 4.1 million in

HUBERT HUMPHREY: A Biography

By Carl Solberg. 572 pp. $19.95. Norton, 500 Fifth Ave., New York, N.Y.

Reviewed by Eugene J. McCarthy

ARL SOLBERG has done a thorough job in collecting information and commen-tary on Hubert Humphrey, man and politician. It is evident that he has read what has been written about Humphrey by Humphrey him-self and by others. He has included information gathered through the techniques of what is called "oral history," and has, according to the preface of the book, studied the Humphrey Papers, recently opened to the public by the Minnesota Historical Society. Out of all of this has come a pedestrian book.

The book is substantively not very different from other books that have been written about Senator Humphrey, possibly because there was so little about the Humphrey career that was either private or secret. The public and the private man were much the same.

Although the positive achievements of Hubert Humphrey are noted — his legislative accomplishments (a little overstated), his special gifts as an orator, demonstrated most notably in his civil rights speech at the Democratic convention in Philadelphia in 1948, a speech which set the Democratic Party on a course which brought it despite delays and distrac-tions to the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 — the overall tone of the book is one of tragedy, marked by Humphrey's failures in his bid for the vice presidency in 1956, and his bid for the presidential nomination in 1960, and finally by his defeat by Richard Nixon in 1968.

Undoubtedly there were distressing, possi-bly tragic aspects to the Humphrey career, but these were largely offset by his successes and achievements, not fully or appreciatively noted in this book. The energy, time, and spirit that Humphrey gave to speeches are presented almost as though Humphrey was indulging in a had half with when in fact it was in these presents. bad habit, when in fact it was in these speeches and through them that he may well have made his greatest contribution to the good of the

The tragic or near-tragic elements in Humphrey's life were two, both noted with sympathy by Solberg — one his continuing financial difficulties and the other the abusive treatment of him by Lyndon Johnson.

Hubert Humphrey

Humphrey's financial troubles began before he entered politics. They were problems com-mon to most persons coming into adulthood in the Depression years. They continued on through most of his political life, and ended only in the years after the 1968 defeat. Running for the presidency was expensive, even in the '50s and '60s when politics was less costly. Humphrey, as the book points out had no personal fortune, or wealthy relatives to draw on, and only a few persons who might have been called "large" or "reliable" contributors. Much of his support was sparse and marginal, and often from demanding contributors.

The author notes and describes the other tragic strain in the Humphrey career, that of his relationship with Lyndon Johnson, and the abuse he accepted as a part of that relationship, but leaves the reader with no better un-derstanding of either why Johnson so abused Humphrey or of why Humphrey tolerated the

The book might better have ended without the last chapter entitled "The Man and His Legacy." It reads like something the editor or the publisher asked the author to include in the

You Can Be an Athlete — of Some Sort

By Judy Klemesnud New York Times Service

EW YORK - So they New YORK — 55 .... sixth grade when the softball kept rolling between your legs. You were not a "natural athlete," they said, and you were always one of the last ones chosen for every

Take heart. Dr. Robert Arnot, a specialist in sports medicine. believes that everyone is an athlete. All you need do, he says, is choose the sport suited to your unique combination of body parts.

An athletic 36-year-old New Yorker. Arnot calls his concept "sportselection." He believes that body type, heart and lung power, muscular power, balance and agility are among the factors that determine whether one will do well at a particular sport. His views are presented in a new book, "Sportselection" (Viking, $17.95). "There is no such thing as a natural athlete." Arnot believes. "You don't find O. J. Simpson pitching baseball or Tracy Caulkins bike racing. Each person has a very specific and limited set of skills. No one has the whole package. As a child. Arnot was rather klutzy at team sports himself. "They used to stick me out in left field, where I could do the least amount of damage." he related. "I couldn't see the ball and I was terribly unpopular." As a result, he said, he grew up with "a tremendous sort of disrespect for team sports and the people who played them."

When he was 14, a physiologist told him that because of his long, lean frame he could become a good cyclist, long-distance runner and skier, so he took them up and soon excelled. Today he runs marathons and competes in cross-country skiing, wind-surfing, cycling and speed skating. Arnot's book covers the skills needed for seven sports — tennis. eveling, wind-surfing, swimming. downhill skiing, cross-country skiing and running - with illus-trated physical tests. Asked why he had chosen those particular sports. Arnot smiled and said: "I was selfish - I do all seven." He added that they are sports that people can start later in life.

Dr. Peter Arnot

He sounded like a sociology professor when asked why he thought adults would want to begin a new sport: "This is a time of declining expectations, and not everyone is going to have a Rolls-Royce or an estate. But if you get out there every afternoon and do a sport that you really enjoy. you're going to feel better about yourself and look better."

Here are some of the skills he believes are needed for each of his seven sports: • Tennis — "The key is explosiveness. The very first two steps you take are so important. You

Heart and lung power are not very important. People say it's an endurance sport, but the longest point is 20 to 30 seconds." • Cycling — "The bicycle is the ideal all-around exercise machine. Virtually everyone with good knees and no major orthopedic injuries can ride a bicycle to get in shape. It helps if you are tall."

• Wind-Surfing — "This is probably the most interesting sport because nobody grew up agility and balance and some other sports background. Skiing has the highest crossover. And it helps to be short and light."

· Swimming — "Virtually anyone can do it. If you are hopelessly overweight and have a lot of body fat, this is the best exercise because it does not strain the joints and your weight is neutralized. This is the all-round sport for weight loss and general fit-

 Downhill Skiing — This is a highly specific sport. The primary thing is agility. It helps if you are a bit knock-kneed, have short legs, big buttocks and thighs, and a low center of gravity. It takes a lot of heart and lung power."

 Cross-Country Skiing —
 This is the king of all sports. It takes more heart and lung power than any other sport but rowing and it develops the entire body. It helps if you have a high center of gravity, long legs and a huge.

heart and lung package."

Running — "You should be light — two pounds per body-inch [about 350 grams per body centimeter] — with narrow hips, long legs and a very elastic frame. This kind of build is very unusual in America, and a lot more people are running than should be. They would probably be having a much better time in another sport, like swimming, cycling, roller-skating or cross-country skiing, where they could become increasingly better. And they wouldn't be having the injuries they have in running." What about someone with a downhill skier's build who is afraid to ski? "Then they should try something similar, like rollerskating, water-skiing or windsurfing," he replied.

And what if you find that the sport you dearly love is not the sport for you?

"Sportselection can make you much better at your sport," Arnot said, "because you can learn the areas in which you are weakest and work to improve them. Agility and explosiveness are two areas that definitely can be im-

Surely there are some hopelessly uncoordinated people who cannot be "sportselected." Arnot conceded a small point. "But they can take an aerobic dance class.
